What You Can Do
Access to American Diplomacy is free of charge and does not require registration.

- We invite you to visit our website, read or print articles that interest you, and research the hundreds of articles in our archives:

  www.americandiplomacy.org

- We are always looking for new material, and we welcome reader comments on our articles. Send article submissions and comments to:

  editor@americandiplomacy.org

- You may subscribe, free of charge, to receive e-mail notification of new material as it is posted, by clicking on the “Subscribe” tab on the website home page or by sending a message to:

  publisher@americandiplomacy.org
About Our Journal

American Diplomacy is an Internet-based professional journal. We publish articles of commentary and analysis, scholarly research of general interest, feature stories, Foreign Service memoirs, reviews of articles and speeches available on the Internet, book reviews, editorials, comments from readers, and announcements.

Our target audience includes foreign affairs professionals, active and retired; scholars, educators, and students; and others interested in international relations.

Our goals are to draw on the expertise of diplomatic practitioners as well as the insights of academics to educate readers on current international issues, to promote greater understanding of foreign service life and the role of diplomats, and to encourage youthful readers to consider a Foreign Service career.

Articles

Articles are peer reviewed by foreign affairs professionals or scholars in the relevant field. Authors include both practitioners and academics. New material is posted on the website monthly, and original material is then moved to permanent archives that are readily available (under the Archives tab on the home page) for research.

Readers

Visits to articles on the American Diplomacy website have increased steadily, and now total more than 200,000 a year. Subscribers, who receive notices about new material, are located in over 50 countries. The journal’s value as an educational resource has been recognized by links on the websites of Harvard, Columbia, Johns Hopkins, Georgetown, and other prestigious universities as well as the research collection of the Library of Congress.

Editorial Policy

We maintain a nonpartisan stance with regard to U.S. politics, do not adopt any “official” positions, and seek to maintain balance in addressing controversial issues. Our authors reflect a wide range of political views, from left to right, as well as foreign policy traditions from realist to idealist.

History

In 1996 a group of retired American diplomats in the Raleigh-Durham-Chapel Hill triangle of North Carolina launched American Diplomacy as an electronic journal. They did so with the cooperation of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, which provides website hosting facilities, and with the encouragement of the Triangle Institute for Security Studies and the UNC Curriculum for Peace, War, and Defense.