CLASSES TAUGHT

- Introduction to Communications: An introductory course designed to provide an overview of the structure and functions of the media in the United States. Students gain a basic knowledge of the United States media industry including radio, television, books, magazines, film, newspapers, advertising, public relations, and the World Wide Web. The effects of the media as well as the political and economic forces that influence them are also examined.
- First Year Studies: A class offered to first year students to assist in the successful transition from high school to college. The instructor aids in introducing students to the campus, its services, resources, and facilities. The instructor also aids students with their academic planning and selection of academic majors.
- Communications in an Information Age: This course is designed to develop an understanding of the full range of traditional and emerging communication systems and their operations. The goal is to increase media literacy, the ability to critically evaluate and utilize the full range of media and communications systems to find, evaluate, and utilize information effectively.
- Communication Research Methods: Students are taught how to translate communication problems into questions that can be answered with systematic research and how to find information on communication problems and solutions. Students are also taught various data gathering methods used in social science research and when to apply them. Students gather data and are taught how to analyze and interpret the results.
- Sport Communication: Students are taught the basics of communications in the sports environment. The class is devoted to skills such as writing press releases and developing positions on issues related to sports and media. Topics also included the exploration of sociological issues involving sport and media.
- Intercollegiate Athletics: The class is an overview of the collegiate athletic structure in the United States. All levels of the NCAA (I, II, III), the NAIA and Junior Colleges are examined.

- Event Management: Study of the various principles involved in the organization, promotion, and management of sporting events. Students combine theory and practice through experience with an actual sporting event.
- Media Issues and Sport: A graduate level course in which issues such as race and gender are explored in context with media and sport. The development of sport media and media influence on sport are also examined.
- Research Techniques in Sport: Evaluate, compare, and contrast research techniques in sport with consideration for and experiences in appropriate review, design, and analytical procedures, and proposal development
