ABOUT THE SYMPOSIUM

The North Carolina Journal of International Law & Commercial Regulation is a student-run law journal at the University of North Carolina School of Law in Chapel Hill, North Carolina. Now in its thirty-second year of publication, the Journal is dedicated to stimulating the intellectual climate through legal scholarship in the area of international law. Recognizing the need to foster discussion of international law in the general public discourse, the Journal holds an annual symposium that focuses on important issues in international law and brings together participants from across the legal community for an illuminating discussion and debate.

This year, The North Carolina Journal of International Law & Commercial Regulation cordially invites you to attend its annual symposium entitled Extraordinary Rendition: The State Secrets about the War on Terror. The symposium will address the legal propriety of extraordinary rendition, the alleged practice of transferring suspected terrorists to foreign governments where harsh interrogation methods can be used outside the reach of United States law. The discussion will focus on the policy implications of shielding information about these transfers through the states secret privilege, with a particular emphasis on the recent Fourth Circuit decision of Khaled El-Masri. Also, participants will reflect on the prospects for litigation on rendition related issues in U.S. Courts as well as recent legislative developments. Participants will also consider the local effects in light of recent allegations that private North Carolina companies are sponsoring some of these extraordinary rendition flights to foreign governments. Attendees will have the opportunity to ask questions of our distinguished panelists who have been involved in all stages and both sides of rendition related cases and legislation. On behalf of The North Carolina Journal of International Law and Commercial Regulation and the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill School of Law, we invite you to join us for the discussion of this timely and important topic.
