Fields of Teaching and Research Interest

Public policy, agenda-setting, interest groups, lobbying, social movements, budgeting, French politics, European Union, research design and measurement, issue-definition, framing, punctuated equilibrium theory, capital punishment, in US and comparative perspectives.

CURRENT RESEARCH

Policy Agendas Project (see www.policyagendas.org and <http://www.comparativeagendas.org/>)

Continued expansion of the datasets for the Agendas Project. Current foci include public opinion measures, better media indicators, new databases on association populations and social protests, and the development of computer-assisted coding systems.

Developing Policy-Specific Measures of Public Opinion. NSF grant for 2010–12 for the integration of better measures of public opinion into the policy agendas project. With Jim Stimson.

Comparative Policy Agendas projects. Projects are underway in Denmark, Belgium, France, Canada, United Kingdom, Scotland, Spain, the Netherlands, Italy, Portugal, Switzerland, Israel, Australia, Hong Kong, and for the State of Pennsylvania. Bryan Jones and I collaborate and advise on all these projects. I am particularly involved with the French, Spanish, and Pennsylvania projects, including overseeing parts of the data collection.

French Agendas Project site: <http://www.agendas-france.fr/>

Pennsylvania Policy Database: <http://www.temple.edu/papolicy/>

The Politics of Information. With Bryan D. Jones. In progress, for submission in 2012.

Capital Punishment Research (see <http://www.unc.edu/~fbaum/Innocence/Innocence.htm>)

Following on the research I conducted for a book published in 2008, I continue to be involved in statistical analyses of the application of the death penalty in the US and in North Carolina. My research focuses on the application of the death penalty, including the occurrence of errors, the prevalence of cases overturned, racial bias, and geographic arbitrariness. Much of this work involves gathering statistical evidence about the characteristics of those executed or on death row: their jurisdiction, the nature of the victims, and other factors. A number of UNC undergraduate students have become involved in this research over the years and have written senior theses or other projects related to this line of research. Papers in progress are listed in the web site above.

Transatlantic Collaboration on Civil Society (see <http://www.ua.ac.be/main.aspx?c=SGIG>)

A network of scholars in the US and EU developing proposals beginning in Spring 2008 for research collaborations on the topic of interest groups, lobbying, and civil society. Convenors of the group are Jan Beyers (Antwerp) and Christine Mahoney (Virginia). This is a long-term research project that should develop a number of grant proposals, and ECPR standing group on interest groups, and other activities over the next many years. In 2010 the European Science Foundation funded this research in six countries.

Framing Policy Debates in the European Union. NSF award with Christine Mahoney and Heike Kluever, 2011 to 2013, to study how interest groups frame policy arguments in a random sample of EU decisions, in collaboration with the ESF award listed above. Our focus is on the quantitative analysis of frames used in the texts submitted by interest groups. Other members of the collaboration will conduct interviews.
